This year's story is one of dual growth. From our existing Centres we have grown both the number of people we support and the support we offer to ensure we are helping as much as we can. And we have built new Centres to ensure we are helping as many as we can.

The last year has been a significant year for Maggie's and one in which we have moved into a new phase of growth.

In 2011, we had almost 100,000 visits; a 17% increase on the previous year. 10,500 people with cancer visited a Centre for the first time; a 30% increase. And following a concerted effort, nearly 30,000 visits to Maggie's were by men; a 19% increase.

In 1996, we were a small team focused on piloting Maggie's ideas; now we are a growing organisation that is ready to make the biggest difference it can, one which must balance investment in new Centres with continuing and increasing the work each Centre does.

But there are still people with cancer in the UK who don't have access to a Maggie's Centre, so our focus on growth continues. In the last year we have opened Centres in Nottingham, Swansea and Glasgow, each of which quickly became well-used by the local community. Centres in Hong Kong, Newcastle, Aberdeen, Lanarkshire and Oxford are in progress and architects have been appointed to help create eight more.

In addition to that, we've launched a campaign for a new Centre in East London at St Bartholomew's Hospital in addition to Maggie's West London, with the ultimate ambition of making Maggie's accessible to everybody with cancer across London.

It is reassuring that, while all this has been going on, our commitment to the quality of our programme has ensured that 99% of visitors to Maggie's rated our support as helpful, and that our approach to cancer care continues to be endorsed by the NHS.

None of what we've achieved would be possible without a huge number of very special people – supporters, fundraisers and volunteers; patrons, campaigners and professionals; and of course all the people who work for Maggie's both in the Centres and behind the scenes.

We'll need continued support to meet the challenges ahead. There are currently two million people with cancer in the UK and this is set to rise to four million by 2030. With a new diagnosis every two minutes*, we need to make sure we can support as many as we can and as much as we can. Thank you in advance for helping us to do this.

We are committed to balancing growth in two key areas: investment in new Centres, so we can help as many as we can; and investment in existing Centres, so we can help as much as we can. In 2011, we grew the total number of visits to our existing Centres, and following particular focus in these areas; we grew the number of visits by men, the number of first time visits from people with cancer, and the number of visits from families and friends.

We are very proud that our expert staff can support such a diverse range of cancer types. There will always be some difference between the cancer types represented at Maggie's and the national average; due to regional variations, differing prognoses and differing willingness to access support between men

Maggie's Nottingham opened in November 2011 and means that more than a million people can now access Maggie's.

"I hope that people find it charming; something like a surprising home. From the outside, the playful appearance will entice people to take a look through the door; once they do, the harmony of light and space will create a uniquely welcoming environment."
Piers Gough, CBE, Architect

The near symmetrical design and generous height allows Maggie's Nottingham to have a real sense of space and balance. Nottingham-born designer Sir Paul Smith designed the interior, which includes photos taken during his travels around the world, and bright cushions and tiles designed to spark conversation – helping people to connect with others going through similar experiences.

"My favourite part of the building is the kitchen – it's so warm and inviting. It means a great deal to me to be able to spend time at Maggie's. It's a really valuable space."

Maggie's Glasgow (Gartnavel) is our second Centre in Glasgow, and was funded by a generous grant from Walk the Walk. One of our primary aims is to make it as easy as possible for people with cancer to access a Centre near them. So when the Beatson West of Scotland Cancer Centre announced that

And it doesn't stop there. The Hong Kong Centre, designed by Frank Gehry, which replaces the current interim Centre at Tuen Mun Hospital is scheduled to open in November 2012. In February, we broke ground on the site of Maggie's North East in Newcastle, having appointed Ted Cullinan of Edward Cullinan Architects. We will also be breaking ground at the Churchill Hospital in Oxford with a purpose built space to eventually replace the current interim Centre.

Our final three Centres in Scotland are all making good progress too. Having appointed Kjetil Thoreson of Snohetta Architects to Maggie's Aberdeen, we went on site in August 2012. And Neil Gillespie of Reich & Hall Architects has designed Maggie's Lanarkshire. We are working with Walk the Walk to bring a Maggie's Centre to Forth Valley, which will be designed by Prof. Alan Pert of Nord Architects.

With 28,540 new cancer diagnoses a year in London, and currently only one Maggie's Centre, we have launched the London campaign. There is at least one cancer specialist facility in each of London's cancer networks and so we aim to have a Maggie's Centre in each one too. So far, we have Maggie's West London, and our next Centre will be in the grounds of St Bartholomew's Hospital. We have appointed Steven Holl Architects to carry out the design.

We are delighted to announce that we have appointed Biba Dow and Alun Jones of Dow Jones Architects to design our second Centre in Wales, Maggie's Cardiff, and that Lord Norman Foster will be designing Maggie's Manchester at the Christie. Centres in Southampton, Leeds and Liverpool are also in the planning stages.

In May 1993, Maggie Keswick Jencks was told that her breast cancer had returned and spread to her bones, liver and brain. She was given two to three months to live and then asked to leave the room because the consultant had so many other patients to see. Sitting in a gloomy hospital corridor underneath harsh strip lighting, she felt there must be a better way.

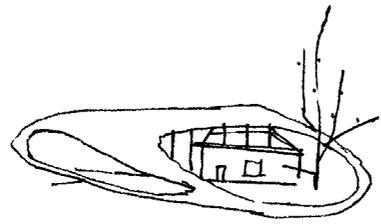

She joined an advanced chemotherapy trial and extended her life by 18 months. During that time, she worked closely with her medical team, which included oncology nurse Laura Lee, now Maggie's Chief Executive, to develop a new approach to cancer care.

In order not to be a 'cancer victim', she believed you needed information that would allow you to be an informed participant in your medical treatment, stress reducing strategies, psychological support and the opportunity to meet other people in similar circumstances in a relaxed domestic atmosphere. She talked to her medical team at the Western General Hospital in Edinburgh about a place to help people with the very real, if non-medical, problems of living with cancer. She created a blueprint for a pioneering venture – and spotted a stable block in the grounds of the hospital that would provide the perfect space.

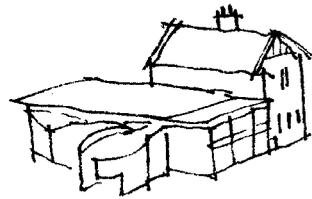

Maggie was determined that people should not "lose the joy of living in the fear of dying" and the day before she died in June 1995, she sat in her garden, face to the sun and said: "Aren't we lucky?"

In November 1996, the first Maggie's Centre opened in Edinburgh and what Maggie had planned became real. We now have 12 Centres in the UK and in 2011, almost 100,000 people walked through our doors, meaning that we're reaching many more people than Maggie ever imagined.
